NOTE.

WHILE engaged in the compilation of the Concordance to Shelley's Poetry I have frequently lost much time and found not a little vexation in hunting through the Table of Contents, or through the volumes themselves, for one of the minor poems or fragments. As it seemed to me probable that other students of the poet's works had often experienced the same difficulty, I judged that an alphabetical Table of Contents adapted to the three most important editions would not be otherwise than acceptable.

Several of the fragments I have deemed it advisable to enter under two heads, for while Mr. Forman has, most ingeniously, and I venture to think most happily, adapted titles to nearly all the fragments, Mr. Rossetti has given them as they were found without other distinction in the Table of Contents than the first line. These will be found under both headings; e.g., the fragment to which Mr. Forman gives the title of "Love the Universe" is in Mr. Rossetti's Table under the heading, "And who feels discord now"; and a student who had been used to one edition would hardly recognise the poem under the title to which he was unaccustomed. It is possible my well-meant endeavour will be less useful than I think; at least it will be but one more square in the oft-referred-to tessellated pavement.

F. S. ELLIS.
